Chapter One

Jack walked out of his cat-door to the outside. It was a long time since he been outside ever since he went to the Cutter. He saw at the other side of the Thunderpath was the Pine Forest. He always wanted to go there but his parents told him never to venture off. He walked toward the Thunderpath, but a monster ran by. He waited until the monster was gone until he walked onto it. it felt like burning cement and it felt crumbled even thought it wasn't crumbled.

Jack walked along, one paw in front of the other very slowly until he was at the Pine Forest. So many scents! He wondered what lived in the forest. He shivered, remembering his mother's tales of the savage warriors cats that ate anything and killed anything that they saw. And worse, the warriors ate bones! He didn't want to get eaten by those Clans. He would stay clear of them....If he could.

Although, Jack didn't want to cause any mischief or get lost. He kept on walking. He saw a line of four or five trees with star markings all the way of to the cloud-shaped leaves. He scented many cats, then cowered in fear to find out that this is where the warriors met at every full moon to plan their evil attacks. But are those rumors true? Jack didn't know.

Chapter Two

Jack ran as fast as he could. Dogs were chasing him! If only he could find an escape route...All he saw was trees everywhere! He didn't even know how to climb yet! The dogs were still chasing him. He was only a 3 month old kitten, he was to young to die! The dogs didn't know how old and young he was, of course.

Jack saw a gorge with water at the bottom of it. He couldn't stop himself! He fell off the gorge into the water. He didn't know what the dogs were doing. He struggled to keep his head out of the water. He was going to drown! He began to panic and started to sink. He couldn't see where he was going! He knew it was the end, either he it himself on a rock or drowned. The water got faster and faster. it felt like he was hitting little hills. but each drop got longer and longer. the water held him flat.

Then a huge current took Jack in and he felt himself falling endlessly. The water hurt his fur. He hit the bottom of the water that led to a big space of a pond. He stayed underwater motionless until he reached the shore.

"Well, what do we have here? A kittypet?" a strange cat said. Jack struggled to put his head up. He was gasping for air.

"We should kill em'?" the other cat said. The words hit Jack. These were the warriors cats! He knew it was the end...

"Look it, he's a kitten! the Warrior Code says to never hurt a kit."

Jack was confused. They were not gonna hurt him??? He got up. "Your the warriors cats? Ahh! You.. They eat bones... Don't kill me and eat me! Please.."

The cats looked at each other. "We don't eat...'Bones??' Your a kittypet, kid. Go back to your Twolegs!" One of the cats said.

"You mean my housefolk? I'm lost...I kinda fell of a... a cliff. And I randomly ended up here?" Jack said.

"Let's get him out!" Said a jet black Tom.

A light grey She-cat said, "No. We can test his skills as an apprentice. I am glad to have a new warrior in training."

Jack shook his head. "I'm gonna be trained to be a monster? No way! I don't want to eat bones.. Or even cats of my own kind!"

The light grey She-cat, who happens to be their leader, said, "Those rumors are fake. We are just Clan cats. Ah, kittypets pass down rumors of," She got head to head with Jack ,"Us being bad and evil."

Jack nodded his head. "Perfect," Said the light grey She-cat.

"Wait! I didn't get your name. I'm Jack."

"I'm Clearstar. I will be your mentor. And, don't forget that I'm also the Clan leader! This is OceanClan! I hope you train well." And with that, she walked away.

Chapter Three

Jack pawed at the waterfall, pretending it was his enemy. He was training. He tried to bite at the falling water, but all he got was water in his mouth.

Clearstar laughed. "I that's enough waterfall training for today. You have to learn to swim." Jack gasped.

"Swimming? I would drown!"

"I will make sure you won't drown. You should of seen me when I was an apprentice! I was scared to even drink the water!" Clearstar said as she led Jack toward the deeper water.

Clearstar started doing the kitty-paddle (the cat version of doggie-paddle). "Follow what I do," She said. Jack jumped in, struggled, then pushed himself up and struggled again. Clearstar caught him by the scruff and helped him swim.

Jack finally got to learn how to swim. He thought swimming was fun.

Chapter Four

"Get her to Brownleaf!" A call came from the camp enterance. Flamepaw looked behind him to see Dawnheart dragging an apprentice, about 8 moons, Flamepaw thought. "Brownleaf!"

Brownleaf, the medicine cat, padded over to Dawnheart and the apprentice. "She's badly hurt, but I have to examine her in my den," She said, helping the apprentice up. The apprentice limped over to the medicine cat's den, which was in a small hole.
